Adaptive Re-Use Award

Tim McLeod from the law firm Chow McLeod is seen accepting the Architectural Heritage Award for Adaptive Re-Use of their current premises.

The premises was built by the Royal Bank of Canada a hundred years ago. The new bank building was one of the finest in the country, with classical columns, imported exterior terra cotta and lavish interior detailing.

The Chow McLeod law firm has adapted the building for their own use, but has restored much of the original grandeur.

The firm received this award for the respect it shows for the past, pride in community and investment in the future.

The Awards ceremony took place in Regina on Wednesday, September 23, 2009.
